

ABSTRACT

Systems and methods are provided for selecting a value set associated with a set of parameters. A real cost function generates a real cost for a first value set associated with a set of parameters. A genetic algorithm generates a second value set that is a variation of the first value set. A cost function approximator determines an approximate cost based on the real cost and a value set variation between the second value set and the first value set.